A Journey of Family
Bonding with Epshipha 2014.

On February 22, 2014, I appreciated the fact that Anna and I were the same age. I found her dimple charming, and she was a young woman who had an open mind. Whenever I reprimanded Arnold, Anna would be by my side. She encouraged me to leave the house as soon as possible. I had confidence that one day I would be able to walk, but it saddened me that Anna couldn't witness that milestone. If she were still alive, I would confide in her and share things that I couldn't discuss with my family, friends, or anyone else. I believed that she was still with me, even though I couldn't see her. I had planned to accompany her on her journey.

In a heartfelt message written to Epshi at 9:30 p.m., while everyone was asleep, I expressed my love for Anna and asked her to reciprocate those feelings. During that time, I also reflected on my friendships and the immense adoration I had for my friends. The last movie I watched with Anna was "Chadramugi," and her final dance performance for the annual day was "adi vaadi machinichi."
